What is going on here?

Watch. What is going on?

Hold the switch on the right down to switch on the light.

You see a 3D animation: A rotating framework with 16 rods is flying past you very fast. As each rod passes, a strobe light flashes (approx. 13 times every second) and you get a glimpse of the objects at it. These objects are each slightly different to the ones at the bar before. Your brain can't separate the single images and puts them together to a short 10 second movie in 3 dimensions.

Who's to say what happens in a pile of trash when no one is looking? Gregory Barsamian uses the arts of animation and sculpture to investigate what really happens when no one is paying attention. Pulling together his interest in dreams and the unconscious, sculpture, animation and mechanics, the artist fashions a sort of living dream right before your eyes.
